

Senior Lecturer in Sport Coaching (x3)

Leeds Beckett University, Carnegie Faculty, School of Sport
An equal opportunities employer
CAF288930A
Full-time, permanent
Grade 8 (£40,847 to £47,328)

We are investing in our academic provision and seeking to appoint a Senior Lecturer to join our team of experienced academic staff. We are looking for an inspiring and enthusiastic academic to make a key contribution to our academic provision through teaching, research and enterprise.

Applications are invited from persons capable of making a substantial contribution to our provision at both undergraduate and postgraduate level in, or related to, one of the following disciplines:

- Science of Sport Coaching
- Talent Development
- Performance Analysis
- Skill Acquisition
- Sport Pedagogy

The successful candidate will teach across a range of discipline related modules, provide course and/or module leadership, have an established or developing independent research profile, and an ability to contribute to the enterprise activity of the Carnegie School of Sport. You will hold a relevant doctoral qualification and have a strong appreciation of the inter-disciplinary nature of our work.

The Carnegie School of Sport, with its 80 year history, has a strong reputation for excellence within sport and physical education. We offer a wide range of very popular sport related undergraduate and postgraduate courses that provide distinctive pathways for our students and meet the vocational requirements of an expanding field. Research and consultancy activities underpin our teaching, with academic staff being recognised as experts within their fields. The quality of this research is evident in the outstanding results achieved in the 2014 Research Excellence Framework, where we ranked 2nd nationally when accounting for both research quality and the number of contributing staff.

For more information, and to apply, please follow this link:

<http://goo.gl/6BXQ4n>